Detailed Description of Proposed Use/Structure New single-family townhouses located in the Summit Powder Mountain development located at the top of Powder Mountain. The dwellings are individually platted, but are collected under one undulating roof. This shared structure provides a reduced design and construction cost, while increasing available space, with higher energy efficiency. The low profile of the structure minimizes obstructions to views from uphill sites. The building shell consists of wood framing members, and is highly insulated both in the stud cavities as well as with continuous insulation at the exterior. The primary exterior materials are wood siding and rusty 'Corten' steel, with a metal roof. Interior materials consist of tile and wood flooring, wood paneling, gypsum drywall, and glass/frosted glass.
