Comments

Land use permit issuance is based on representations made on plans and other documents. This permit is not valid until the County Engineer's Office determines, consistent with requirements provided by the land use code, that the minimum amount of infrastructure has been constructed.

No specific setbacks due to this lot being a "building pad" dedicated on a PRUD plat. Building must be contained within "building pad" except that projections may occur in the "limited common" space that is designated for such purposes on the recorded plat. The proposed building complies as proposed.

All geology requirements and recommendations (provided by IGES Report Project No. 01628-015) must be followed. Included is the requirement to have an IGES staff member on-site to verify compliance with report requirements and recommendations.

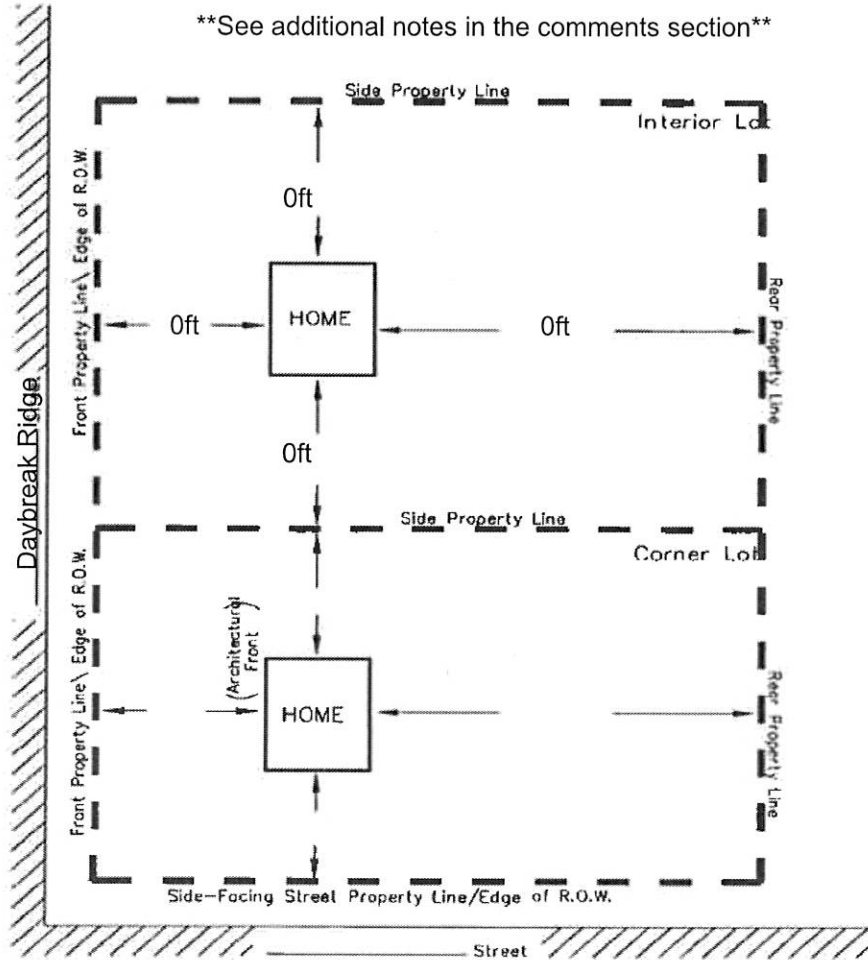

Land Use Permit

The Powder Mountain Development Agreement recommends high-efficiency wood burning systems when wood is used. Maximum dwelling height allowed in the DRR1 Zone is 35'.
